

THE JORDAN HOUSE

At the southwest corner of High and Glasgow Streets is the site of the Jordan House, which was built prior to the Revolutionary War by the Vans Murray family. The Jordan House was a two and one-half story frame house of Georgian design with a gabled roof, gabled dormers, five bay front, and a porticoed center entrance. A wing added to the rear of the house was originally one of the dwellings on the Belvoir plantation, below Cambridge. An outstanding feature of the property was the lovely boxwood gardens, some of the finest in Cambridge. The house was demolished in 1967.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The original part of the Jordan Home was built prior to the Revolutionary War, evidently by one of the Vans Murray clan. Two miles below Cambridge was the Belvoir Farm, which at that time was also part of the Vans Murray holdings. One of the dwellings on the Belvoir plantation was moved to Cambridge and joined to the original part of the old Jordan house, apparently to the rear. The property was sold to James Bond Chaplain by William Vans Murray on July 19, 1823. On November 25, 1865 the property was purchased by Mr. William H. Jordan and remained in the Jordan family until the time of its demolition, about 1967.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE
The Jordan House, typically Georgian in design, was a two and one half story frame house with internal chimneys on the north and south facades. On the front of the gable roof were five gabled dormers with six over six sash. The front facade was five bays long and had a center entrance covered by a portico. Supported by four Doric columns, the flat roofed portico had a small pediment on the front and a low ballustrade around the sides. The windows were six over six sash. To the rear of this house were lovely boxwood gardens, some of the finest in Cambridge.
